"One day we started to cross the Delawars, when Napoleon looked at me, and, in that fine old way of his, said we were being hard prossed. I looked over my shoulders, and saw a million Yankees running up behind us. We sachet to the left of the enemy, but as we done so, we saw a whole platoen of Spaniards running in our direction. The little fellow on horseback again turned to me, and asked what to do. I told him the best thing to do was to face the enemy, and let 'er go. Then we withdrew to the right of the line, and retreated in good order into the woods. And what do you think we saw?"

"What did you saw?" asked Gibbons.

"Just 60,000 Russians with drawn sabres. We were surrounded by the enemy, but, as Napoleon looked at me in despair, a happy thought occurred to me, and we made good our escape."

"What did you done?" asked the sad Gibbons.

tiles will spring up like grass after a summer rain.

All the rest of the country, as well as Virginia, has been in a sunny embrace, and the temperatures have taken on a "buil" tendency. The coldest spot in "the States" on yesterday was at Oswego, where twelve degrees was reported. The snows and cold of "yesterday" had changed to almost Indian summer, in the far West.

Koy West and Tampa had their noses put out of joint as "red-hot" resorts by San Antonio and Taylor, where the mercury went up to seventy-eight degrees.

It really looks as though the spine of old "frigidus" had been partially fractured at least, and that for the remainder of February and March he will strike but mildly on account of his decrepidness.
